

AARON D. MARTIN

P.E., LEED® AP, CPHC®, ASSOCIATE PRINCIPAL

Aaron Martin joined Altieri in 2007. He is responsible for HVAC engineering design and overall project management. Aaron is a highly talented engineer. With extremely strong design and organizational skills, he is assigned some of Altieri's most challenging projects, particularly multi-phased large-scale campus projects such as The National WWII Museum in New Orleans.

Aaron also managed the multi-phased renovation and expansion of the United States Golf Association's (USGA) New Jersey campus, as well as the master-planning and multi-phased renovations at the Saint John Paul II National Shrine in Washington DC. His particularly strong team management skills are key to the successful progress of these complex programs. Aaron effectively manages the requirements of all design team members and works to come up with creative solutions acceptable to all.

Aaron stays ahead of the curve with regard to mechanical systems technical knowledge as well as the latest industry trends such as new HVAC products and energy standards, again ensuring that Altieri brings the most current information to our environmentally responsible design solutions.

In his free time, Aaron takes to remote trails, hiking 40-50 miles over three or four days. Next, he will tackle the last leg of the Northville Lake Placid Trail in upstate New York.
